

I am so grateful to Team Titan for all of their hard work researching the status of Oklahoma's supports for individual with developmental disabilities and their families. This population, unfortunately, is one that continuously gets forgotten and left behind in the research field. It's often difficult to find the kind of research and data points that are crucial in discussions with decision-makers.

These students pulled together a project that SOAR has already referenced many times over in conversations with legislators, communications with disability providers, and even news articles published through the Tulsa World. Having real data points to share has been a game changer in the work our firm does to improve outcomes for the developmental disability community.

To Kester Muthalaly, Joshua Borger, Victoria Mayes, and Tochi Onuwakpa, thank you for your work on this project. I hope you feel the joy of knowing that the work you've done—even as a student—is changing lives in the disabled community.

Gratefully,
